Did You Know? –
Mexico Gave Chocolate To The World

According to legend, humans learned to cultivate cacao and prepare xocóatl thanks to the ancient Toltec ruler-god Quetzalcoátl, who bestowed this heavenly treat on mankind after stealing it from the gods.

During Mexico's colonial era, the Bishop of Chiapas was forced to threaten parishioners with excommunication to keep them from drinking chocolate during the celebration of Mass.

The cacao tree, a small evergreen of the genus Theobroma (food of the gods), thrives in Mexico's wet tropical region.

The tree's fruits, when ripe, are 6-14 inch red pods containing a mass of pulp and 25-50 bitter white seeds that turn brown when exposed to the air.

A pound of cacao averages about 200 beans.

Let's Make Mole'

Boyer

Let's make mole, nice and hot! Stir it in the cooking pot.

Add some choc'late, then some rice, Peanut butter, Very nice!
Garlic, Onions

Garlic, onions cumin too! Lots of chilies, Ooh! Ooh! Ooh! Now you have some mole paste.

None of it will go to waste. Add the chicken just like so. When it's gone there ain't no mo'!
Stir, stir the chocolate, with rice and with tomatoes.

Garlic, onions cumin too, Lots of chilies, Ooh! Ooh! Ooh!

Now put in some mole’ paste, None of it will go to waste!

Add the chicken, just like so, When it’s gone, There ain’t no mo’!

The Children

Formation: Students sit in a circle holding a rock, stone, bean bag etc. After picking the object up on the anacrusis, the students then places the object in front of the student on their right. Continue passing on the beat until the words "tri-ki, tri-ki" when they hold the object and move it right (not letting go), left, right left then finally passing it to their right on the word "tron".

The children sitting on the street are passing stones across their feet.

Stones of purple brown and gray, I wonder if they'd let us play.
